

DATA PROTECTION ACT 2018

OVERVIEW

Data protection is about making sure that personal data is handled lawfully and fairly. To help ensure that organisations protect the personal data of the individuals that they interact with, the UK government has implemented the Data Protection Act 2018. This means that all organisations have a legal obligation to ensure that key data protection principles are adhered to.

The DPA achieves this by setting down principles about how personal data can be handled (processed), and by giving individuals (data subjects) certain rights under the data protection legislation. Of course, it is the responsibility of organisations and the employees that work for them, to make sure these principles are adhered to, and that data is processed on a lawful basis. In simple terms, this means that every employer has an obligation to actively promote the safe and responsible use of data within a business.

This online learning course aims to ensure that learners have a full understanding of the Act and their responsibilities under it.

OBJECTIVES

- Establish what personal data is
- Understand the importance of data protection for individuals
- Know how and why personal information should be processed
- Help ensure your organisation does not fall foul of data protection laws
- Understand the rights of individuals in relation to their personal data
- Establish your role in protecting personal data

DURATION

50 minutes. Including interactions and videos

AUDIENCE

This online training course is suitable for anyone that processes personal data.

CERTIFICATION

Upon completion of the course the learner will receive a CPD certificate.

